If this is the best possible of all worlds, bad luck

The Reverend Thomas Malthus, MA, FRS, wrote his essay in 1819, and rewrote and expanded it twice. It became infamous because its message, which most critics refuted, was very unpalatable. Professor Haydn Washington has challenged the deniers to produce at least as good evidence as Malthus and his followers have done, and are still doing. The result is that either Malthus is correct in his forecast, or there is unlimited water and food for all humanity, forever.

About Peter Trebilco

Peter Trebilco is a Visiting Fellow to the School of Public Health and Community Medicine, and has been on the staff since 1974. He is working with Dr John Dewdney in his writing of the History of the School and of its component members – Health Management, Medical Education and Community Medicine. He is also still teaching in Public Mental Health, a Master of Public Health (MPH) elective, which he introduced to that curriculum.